Even if Singer Palace Hotel didn't have a charming backstory, we'd stay here: it's a beautiful example of early 20th-century Art Deco design, with incredible marble and boiserie and a slightly formal vibe. But it does: the building, designed by architect Mario Loretì, opened in 1930 as the Italian headquarters for Singer, the sewing machine company. Singer eventually left the building and the space hosted bank offices until it was eventually purchased and converted into a hotel. Breakfast brings a lovely buffet of fresh fruits and homemade pastries, as well as an à la carte menu, which is included in the room rate. For lunch and dinner, chef Raffaele Crispino's menu, a fresh look at different regional favorites, does seafood particularly well.
